

International Society of Political Psychology

Annual Conference,

Eden Hall, Lund University

Lund, Sweden

July 15-18, 2004

Conference Theme

The Political Psychology of Hegemony and Resistance

The events of September 11, the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq and their aftermath continue to affect the political situation in the world. The role of the US as a hegemonic power brings into sharp focus the political psychology of hegemony through the exercise of power over politics, media and discourse. At the same time we are seeing increasing contestation of such hegemony among both Western and non-Western societies, as witnessed through terrorist activities, popular resistance, nationalist/religious politics, cultural diversity and through the growing importance of the politics of recognition. Submissions that address any aspect of these themes, as well as those which address the full range of theory and research in political psychology are welcomed.

Ervin Staub, University of Massachusetts at Amherst, USA

The address will focus on psychological changes, including psychological wounds, of survivors, perpetrators and bystanders as such changes are necessary to understand in order to effectively promote reconciliation. It will also discuss the role of healing in reconciliation, and avenues to healing, and consider approaches to reconciliation, including truth, justice, and significant contact. The focus is on understanding the roots of violence between groups and the creation of a shared (in contrast to separate and conflicting) history. In this regard the address also discusses the possibility, conditions required for, and role of forgiveness.
