

Nina Spälti

Mentoring Luncheon Coordinator

My name is Anna Katharina, but everybody calls me Nina. I am a research fellow in the Politics Department of Exeter University where I am working on a ERC funded project about measuring and correcting misperceptions in Europe. I recently completed my PhD in social psychology at Tilburg University, the Netherlands. The focus of my thesis was on decision-making, the processes underlying them, and how they can influence character evaluations. I have also taught and coordinated a course on behavioral change, with a focus on nudging. My current research interest lies mostly in the field of moral psychology, specifically on how we can use moral framing to change attitudes and alter choices.

After completing my PhD in social psychology, I have started working as a research fellow in the Politics Department of Exeter University, where I am working on a project about measuring and correcting misperceptions in Europe. My current research focuses on how we can use moral framing to change attitudes and alter choices.