

Intergenerational Justice Prize 2013/14

The Foundation for the Rights of Future Generations (FRFG) and the Intergenerational Foundation (IF) invite entries for the seventh Intergenerational Justice Prize. Prizes totalling €10,000, funded by the Stiftung Apfelbaum, will be awarded to the best papers submitted.

The topic for the 2013/14 Prize is

Youth Movements for Intergenerational Justice

Topic

In the late 1960s the dissatisfaction of younger generations over the state of society famously found expression in various youth protest movements that had a profound impact on many of the nations where they took place. In subsequent decades youth activism seemed to wither away.

Today, however, young people worldwide are once again taking to the streets and making themselves heard - in student marches and climate activism, in the Occupy movement, the Spanish "¡Democracia Real YA!", the Arab Spring and the recent uprisings at Taksim Square in Istanbul, to name but a few.

Are we witnessing the revival of youth movements? If so, to what extent is intergenerational justice the focus?

Such are the questions that the Intergenerational Justice Prize 2013/2014 would like to see answered. Others might include: How should youth movements be defined? What are the common interests that young people share? How do youth movements develop, and under what conditions do they thrive?

Target group

The Intergenerational Justice Prize is primarily aimed at young academics (undergraduates, graduates, PhD students), but is open to all who take a similarly academic approach to their writing. The submission of group projects is also welcome.

Submission requirements and deadline

Submissions will be accepted until 15 October 2014. For more information about the competition, please consult the IF website (www.if.org.uk; see under Prizes). To request formal entry requirements, email antony@if.org.uk.
