

Catholic University seeks Psychology of Terrorism Instructor for Spring '21

The Department of Psychology at the Catholic University of America is seeking an instructor for an undergraduate course in Psychology of Terrorism, for the Spring 2021 semester. We expect that the course will be taught online. A doctoral degree is required, either in psychology or a closely related field, as is US citizenship.

Here is a brief description from the course catalog:

“This course reviews the psychological (clinical, forensic, political, social) underpinnings of terrorism, and the practical implications for living in a post 9/11 world. Topics include psychological approaches as applied to terrorist motivations, characteristics of terrorist organizations, counter-terrorism strategies, and emerging threats such as weapons of mass destruction and cyberterrorism.”

If you are interested, please contact Dr. Barry Wagner as soon as possible for more information, wagnerb@cua.edu, and attach a CV.
